Dear Mr. Morse:

I am sorry it has taken me so long to write you this thank you letter. I really must confide in you now that previously I had my doubts. But seeing as how the situation has come full circle and all parties concerned have been more than satisfied with its outcome, I take back my original feelings. I want to thank you for your tenacity and for never giving up hope that you would someday find me. I will never forget the night I called you. In all actuality it was my daughter, Karen, who pushed me to call you after I opened your letter. I am sure you can understand my apprehension, there are so many fraudulent firms out there who claim to do what you have succeeded.

Once again, my thanks and a question as to when my original documentation will be returned to me?

Sincerely,

Anita C. Watson
